

A FEW HOURS OF LIFE

It was a beautiful morning where the world was spinning again as it always does. It was a beautiful morning, beautiful enough to hear the birds singing. When the man opened his eyes, his ears had already heard these sounds. Checking side of the bed was a routine for the man like every person. When he checked the bed he should have gotten out urgently because if the woman woke up before the man it meant he was late. He left the house without eating something. The old dog was coming for attention. This was its routine but it had no chance because the man had no time.

He had chance because there was no traffic. There were just a few cars behind and in front of his. On the contrary, there were a lot of people on the sidewalk. It was too early but there were people going to school, working and walking. He saw that the traffic was calm and he drove a little faster. He even passed the traffic lights because he thought the traffic light was meaningless if the traffic was calm. He was arriving at the last traffic lights. After the traffic lights he would park and go to the office to explain why he was late. Just then, he wanted to plan why he was late but came to life with a big noise on him making a plan. After the noise came great silence everywhere and then a ringing everywhere. Behind his eyelids, which he was trying to open with difficulty, he could see people running through the smoke. Amid so much mobility, he wanted to move but both he could not move and felt pain. Fortunately, he still was thinking healthy. There was obviously an accident but he did not even remember the accident because he was thoughtful when the accident happened. He was passed out by pain.

He was alone in the hospital when he opened his eyes. The woman who learned the situation yet was coming to the hospital but the man was alone at that time. The people are alone despite they have family or friends. There are only thoughts in their heads. When he in those thoughts he heard doctors and his brother's voice behind the poorly insulated wall. "He has severe internal bleeding but he is conscious and he can speak with you for a few hours until operation. I am sorry, I am hopeless for operation. This time can be your last meeting with him," said the doctor. His brother heard that and passed out. On the contrary, the man was understanding everything clearly but he did not want that. He would never want to know that he only has a few hours of life left.

The hospital corridor got crowded. The woman was crying for her husband without knowing anything. Yes, she was crying because they were in the hospital. That was enough for her crying. Friends were there too and they were trying to calm the woman. The man's brother was knowing the situation but telling to the woman was difficult but he tried. And then the woman passed out because that situation was very stunning when they were living normally. The man in the room was hearing everything. He was upset for the people in and out not for himself. He was not feeling anything but sadness. It was like he fell into space. "Everything can be nothing with only an incident and if people want to be happy they must not think because if they think, they can realize that one day everything will be empty," he said. The man had bad days as well as good days. The woman who was in the good part of his life came to the room. The woman did not have much time to meet with the man. When the lovers approached, their hearts ached. Then tears are succumb and they can not resist gravity. They knew that this was the last meeting with each other. That's why they were wanting talk about everything.

The man gave the last short time to the woman she devoted her life to. They spoke together until the last minute. After the leaving, the man was going to the operating room with stretcher. He was not feeling anything. He just was thinking that everything was empty. He came operating room at that time and felt that terrible atmosphere. Then he said goodbye to everything to himself.

Five years later, the woman remembered him when she looked at his photos. She was crying, she knew that the man was so close to woman, in her heart.

Berat Yağmur

