One day in 1995, Australian Charlie Beasley was looking for birds in Tasmania when he saw something incredible- an animal that looked like a dog but with tiger stripes, and a tail like a kangaroo. Beasley was sure that it was a thylacine- the famous Tasmanian Tiger! Most scientists believe that the last one died in 1936. But are thylacines still alive? It was impossible to say, because Beasley didn't take a photo. However, in 2005, two German tourists were travelling through Tasmania when they, too, found a thylacine. They discovered the animal when they were getting water. Amazingly, they took some photos too! But when Australian newspapers asked to see the photos, they decided not to see them because they weren't sure if the pictures were real. So still today, the world is waiting to see if the thylacine is still alive, hiding somewhere in the jungles of Tasmania.
